Discover the data you need from eight of the UK's longitudinal studies

CLOSER Discovery has proved really useful to identify which particular variables are in the three studies I use for my work on cognition. Having detailed information on the precise variables all in one place really speeds things up.

#SLLS2017

Welcome from the President

On behalf of the Society for Longitudinal and Lifecourse Studies (SLLS) and as President of the society, I would like to extend a warm welcome to all participants here in Stirling.

Our conference is hosted by the University of Stirling which is celebrating its 50th anniversary this year. Stirling is one of the UK's leading research universities in the fields of social policy, education, health and wellbeing, and economics, so is an excellent fit with the interests of SLLS. Cat Westlake and the SLLS Conference Committee in London and Tony Robertson and the local organizing team in Stirling have been fully committed to making this conference an enjoyable and informative scientific meeting. Judging from the high number of submitted symposia and paper abstracts received from life course researchers worldwide, and the vast scope of topics submitted from well-known experts and early-career talented researchers, we are proud to be able to present a truly interdisciplinary and international conference programme.

Our conference programme covers the full spectrum of important themes of longitudinal and life course research: physical, psychological and social developmental and ageing processes and functioning within and across life course stages, from conception to old age; methods and findings of cohort and panel studies, including record linkage; international comparisons; household, and income dynamics; intergenerational transfers and returns to learning; social-biological interactions; 'mixed', and comparative methods; and the interface between research, policy and practice.

Conspicuous highlights of the programme are the two keynote presentations by Professor Ariel Kalil, Director of the Center for Human Potential and Public Policy (CHPPP) at the University of Chicago Harris School of Public Policy, and David Bell, Professor of Economics at the University of Stirling. Ariel Kalil is a developmental psychologist with a specific interest in economic conditions, parenting, and child development. She directs the CHPPP and co-directs the Behavioral Insights and Parenting Lab, which runs field experiments designed to strengthen parental engagement and child development in low-income families. David Bell is the Principal Investigator of the Healthy Ageing in Scotland (HAGIS) survey, a longitudinal survey of older people in Scotland. Our two keynotes cover two disciplines, two ends of the life span and two research approaches – something of interest for everyone.

We will also be presenting two awards at the conference, the LIVES Best Paper Award 2017 to an early career researcher, generously supported by the Swiss National Centre of Competence in Research LIVES (NCCR LIVES), and the SLLS 2017 John Bynner Distinguished Scholar Award to someone at a later stage in their career. It seems fitting that a society supporting life course research is supporting careers over the life course in this way.

For the first time, SLLS 2017 has put on an extended programme of social activities so that you can get to know more about the University of Stirling and its local environment. On the doorstep, Stirling Castle is an outstanding example of Renaissance architecture and was home to generations of Scottish monarchs including Mary Queen of Scots. The National Wallace Monument commemorates the life of Sir William Wallace, patriot and guardian of Scotland and boasts magnificent 360° views from the top, including the scene of his greatest victory at the Battle of Stirling Bridge in 1297. For those of you who have the time to venture further afield, Loch Lomond and the Trossachs National Park must surely beckon too.

I'm looking forward to an excellent conference with plenty of opportunities for stimulating scientific exchanges and interesting interdisciplinary discussions in the wonderfully historic setting of Stirling.

Amanda Sacker

Welcome from the University of Stirling

Fàilte gu Alba! (Welcome to Scotland!)

And welcome to the 2017 Society for Longitudinal and Life course Studies (SLLS) Annual Conference and to the University and City of Stirling. We are honoured to have you and hope you get a chance to experience all the local area has to offer.

As for the conference itself, we have over 280 delegates who have registered for the conference from multiple disciplines across research, policy and practice. Over the days ahead we will have 155 oral presentations, 17 posters, 22 symposia, 3 workshops and 2 keynote sessions from distinguished speakers. More than 25 countries will be represented across our speakers, making this a truly international event.

Longitudinal and Lifecourse Studies are well represented at the University of Stirling with research across our five faculties. One of the most notable examples, which delegates will hear about in the opening keynote by Prof David Bell, is the new Healthy Ageing in Scotland (HAGIS) Study, the first longitudinal study of Scotland's older people. 2017 is also the University of Stirling's 50th birthday. A lot has happened since 1967, some of which you'll be able to see first-hand if you visit the University Archives as part of our social programme on Thursday afternoon. We also have our beautiful campus that even in the rain is worth exploring!

Apart from the conference, we hope that you will have some time to discover the city of Stirling and the surrounding area. The history of Stirling is rich with legends and events from the likes of William Wallace who fought and won the battle of Stirling Bridge in 1297 against an occupying English army, to the Battle of Bannockburn where Robert the Bruce's defeat of another English army in June 1314 secured Scottish independence. Stirling heritage dates back 800 years to the 12th century, when the town first received the burgh title. It was granted a Royal Charter, becoming one of the most important towns of medieval Scotland. Stirling's importance developed from the fact that it controlled the lowest crossing point of the River Forth. The land to the west of the river was bog and marshland making it impassable for armies to cross. But it's not just about the past, as today Stirling is a vibrant city that aims to blend the history with the modern day.

On behalf of the local organising committee, I am delighted to welcome you to Stirling and the conference.

Tony Robertson,
SLLS 2017 local organising committee chair
Lecturer in Public Health, Faculty of Health Sciences & Sport, University of Stirling
