 - 7.1 Further consideration of Paul Tofts' paper. The previous discussion produced questions rather than decisions. Jennifer Platt has written a note about the Survey Monkey (Minutes of 14.3.14 item 8.1(b))
Survey Monkey provides suggestions for commonly wanted questions, and a format which lays them out clearly with boxes to tick etc. How far it is really suitable to our potential needs I am not sure - don't know how far we could really use our own themes - but its simplest form is free to use, though allowing for only 10 questions, and we could give it a try. But there's no point in committing ourselves to do this unless we know what it is that we want to find out. A small working party seems best for working on this if we want to do it; we all know about drafting by committee.
