This session will offer an introduction into decolonial theory, particularly in its Latin American strand and the modernity/ decoloniality collective's work, focusing on the 'Westernised University' as an institution of modernity/ coloniality. Based on this, it will raise and explore some key issues and debates around research from within such an institution. The session will also propose 'immersive decolonial listening' as a reflexive practice that can support researchers in decolonising their projects, the university, as well as their own beings and knowing.
