Autumn Semester 2021

Knowledge, Society and Difference

This series of seminars brings together researchers who explore the production of identities and difference within a range of contemporary institutions and societies.

Highlighting the work of power/knowledge (education), they each challenge the normative imperatives of modernity that continue to frame everyday life across the globe. They interrogate hierarchies and histories of difference through which intersecting identities (gender, race, sexuality, class, caste, religion, work etc.) are constituted and exclusions are actualised and legitimated.

This series offers space for critical reflections on the colonial traces that infuse dominant discourses of education, citizenship and development.
