

Jane Trueman – What do you offer new researchers? – Transcript

I run the Buddy Scheme and the Language Café, two really exciting projects that I think a lot of PhD researchers will really benefit from, for a number of reasons. The Language Café offers a really nice, relaxed space for students to learn or practice a new language. It's lovely and sociable, a great place to meet people and top up those language skills, which is always good for the CV as well. Or you could also take part as a volunteer and share your experience, so if you are a fluent speaker in any of the languages we offer, you could volunteer your time to help others learn and likewise with the buddies scheme, you can sign up as a new student, if you're struggling here at Sussex and would just like that go to person for support and advice, or as a volunteer. If you are settled yourself and would like to support a another PhD researcher through their transition into University at Sussex.
