Why Library Search?

Why Library Search?

The image shows a screenshot of a library website interface. Three key concepts are highlighted with colored boxes: 'Relevance' in a yellow box, 'Quality' in a light blue box, and 'Control' in a light green box. The background shows a navigation menu with options like 'Books and items in the Library', 'Ebooks', 'Video', and 'Legacy Collection'. The top of the page includes the text 'US | Library of Congress' and 'Accessibility'.

Description

Targeted advertisements, tailored information feeds, and recommended content are now common and somewhat inescapable components of our everyday lives. With the help of searches, browsing history, purchases, likes, and other digital interactions, technological experiences are now routinely "personalized." Companies with access to this information often downplay the fact that users' personal data serves as a key

Verified: Self-presentation, identity management, and selfhood in the age of big data

Open Access

Published online: 17 Apr 2017

Citation <https://doi.org/10.1080/15405702.2016.1269909>

ABSTRACT

New styles of selfhood and self-presentation, forms of social status, and arbiters of “authenticity” are authorized and propagated in the wake of big data and affective capitalism? How are they authorized, for whom, and to what end? This article takes up these questions via an examination of sought-after identity badge, the Twitter verification checkmark, figuring it as both an affective style that incentivizes specific styles of self-presentation and a disciplinary means that seeks to condition and subsume the significance of the millions of forms of self-presentation. Beneath the promise of democratized access to social status and fame, the platforms in and through which we self-present draw us into privatized structures of self-management, and control. To conclude, the article will posit a new “ideal type” of selfhood for the age.

Engagement at the margins: Investigating how marginalized teens use digital media for political participation identity representation "social media"

Abstract

This study investigates the information and participatory political practices of marginalized youth via four focus groups with 23 teens (aged 13–17 years) from two geographically distinct regions of the United States to address this limited understanding. The findings indicate that teens encounter political information and news from members of their social networks via digital media more than legacy media outlets, because it enables them to assert agency over social and political issues to which they feel connected. Furthermore, teens identify a tension between viewing adults, specifically teachers and politicians, as authoritative yet untrustworthy information sources, which can lead to their use of digital media to verify or challenge what adults are telling them. Finally, teens must navigate the sociotechnical challenges of digital media, including exposure to unwanted information and the potential social backlash of posting content that could be considered by others to represent slacktivism.
